

News Release

Date: August 28th, 2020

Since our news release two weeks ago, we have seen three unrelated, confirmed COVID-19 cases at our Flowery Branch, GA production facility. As we have done in other instances, immediate action was taken and the employees, along with those they came into contact with, have been quarantined and are being properly cared for, and fully compensated, while away from our facility.

There have been no additional cases of COVID-19 at any of our other locations, including our restaurants and production facility in Torrance, California

Overall, quarantining employees and employing strong contact tracing has been effective at King's Hawaiian, and we continue to see no related cases coming from within the facilities. Our ongoing safety measures of temperature screening, requiring of masks to be worn, use of size-increased common-space areas (to allow for better social distancing), placement of protective barriers between employees whose jobs do not allow for full social distancing, and continuous cleaning of surfaces with EPA approved cleaner known to kill COVID-19 also remain in place to thwart COVID-19 spread. As employee safety is our #1 concern, we plan to continue these safety precautions indefinitely at the current time.

We remain grateful to all our employees for their continued diligence in following these safety measures, and their dedication to continuing to produce essential food products for the country.

Mahalo,
Mark Taira - CEO
