

News Release

Date: July 9th, 2020

Over the course of the last week we have been made aware of eleven newly confirmed COVID-19 cases at our Torrance, CA production facility. As we have done in all other instances of confirmed COVID cases, immediate action has taken to quarantine employees, along with those they came into contact with, and ensure that they are being properly cared for, and fully compensated, while away from our facility.

We have also been in touch with the Los Angeles public health department and are complying with all guidance from that group for protecting employees, and in many cases have been going above and beyond guidelines to ensure the safest possible environment. Our safety procedures include temperature screening, requiring of masks to be worn, the use of size-increased common-space areas (to allow for better social distancing), placement of protective barriers between employees where appropriate, and continuous cleaning of surfaces with EPA approved cleaner known to kill COVID-19. As employee safety is our #1 concern, we plan to continue these procedures as long as needed to keep everyone safe.

As we have shared throughout this pandemic, we are deeply grateful to our employees who are helping ensure these safety practices are followed so that we can continue to protect our Ohana, while at the same time making sure the country has the essential food products it needs.
